Merry-Go-Round Labor's Advance Impressive

By DREW PEARSON

Labor Day was first proposed by Peter J. Mc-Guire, president of the Carpenters and Joiners Union, in New York in 1882. By 1894 Congress declared it a legal holiday. Eventually the first Monday in September became a red-letter day in all the 48 states . . . approximately 17,500,000 workers, including 3,000,000 women, are members of AFL, CIO and independent unions-the greatest number of organized working people in history. Peter McGuire could hardly dream of finer "espirit De Corps" in organized labor . . . nor is it likely that pioneer labor leaders of the past like Sam Gompers and John Mitchell, whose attempt to improve the status of the workingman was derided as "socialistic" foresaw in their wildest fancies the tremenous gains made by labor in that generation .... according to Elder Labor Statesman Al Hays of the Machinists, labor cannot rest on its past achievements . . . . the American factory worker today earns more than 6 times as much as in 1913. Though living costs have greatly increased, the factory worker's wages still buy more than twice as much as they did 40 years ago. Also, twice as many American workers own their own homes today compared with 1913 . . . . Just as responsible labor leaders are no longer smeared as "socialists." except by extreme reactionaries, so has the American workingman formed a new concept of his relations with management. Because he and his family have prospered under our system, the workingman is a strong believer in free enterprise, as long as it doesn't become monopolistic . . . the word "capitalist" has pretty much disappeared from the American worker's vocabulary, at least as a term of aversion. He doesn't suffer from feeling that he is in a class distinct from the "boss," or that he is incapable of thinking like a man of business - which in every sense he is.

Congenital Defects Often Are Treated Successfully By EDWIN P. JORDAN, M.D.

It is entirely possible for a child born with a club foot, webbed fingers, a cleft palate or some other inborn malformation to rise to heights of fame, and indeed to receive national and international acclaim. This has been done in many fields of human endeavor and speaks well for the ability of human beings to overcome

Such conditions as those mentioned and many other physical variations from normal may be present at birth and naturaly come as a shock to the parents. All, or most of them, are the result of incomplete development inside the womb of the mother and are not really inherited.

What causes them is still not entirely clear although it now seems that infections of the mother with German measles and possibly other diseases, while she is carrying the child, greatly increase the likelihood of this sort of trouble. Certainly, it is a good idea for the prospective mothers to dodge exposure to infections, and particularly German measles, just as carefully as possible.

A newborn baby with a club foot or other inborn malformation almost certainly does not suffer pain, but the parents are acutely distressed. They want to know if it is their fault, what can be done for it, will it interfere with the child's physical or mental development, and how likely is it to happen again with other

It is not the fault of the parents. There is nothing they could have done to prevent it (except to avoid contagious disease during pregnancy). What can be done is something else. A lot can be done for hair lip, cleft palate, club foot and several of the other congenital malformation, especially if they are attacked

For this reason parents should promptly consult someone who knows about these conditions, even if manipulation or operation is to be postponed for a few months or years. The more that can be done, of course, the less will be the interference with the child's normal development.

As to the chances of having a later child with a congenital defect, one has to deal with average figures. The parents of one malformed child have about seven chances out of eight that the next child will be normal, whereas taking all births, a congenital defect occurs only about once in 213.

From the physical standpoint the disadvantages can often be largely overcome by modern treatment methods. It is equally important to battle the mental effects. The sympathetic understanding of parents, teachers, and the rest of us help, but the will to overcome obstacles on the part of the youngster himself is the most

Many youngsters with these congenital defects are remarkable in the way they face and surmount their problems.

Toll Road Warning

For a long time the U.S. Bureau of Public Roads has combated the growth of toll roads like the Pennsylvania and New Jersey turnpikes on the ground they are too costly to motorists, are wasteful duplications of existing road systems, and tend to retard the further development of free highways.

Now the American Society of Planning Officials adds a warning note. Toll roads never have been tested in a depression.

People obviously are willing to pay to get away from stoplights, towns and cities, congestion and all the other normal highway burdens. They probably will continue to be willing so long as planners of the free highway system do nothing to equal the quality of the toll-operated turnpikes.

Manners Make Friends-

You take your wife to a large party where you know many more of the guests than she does. Be sure you don't set her on her own until she has met a number of persons and seems to be making out all right. Even then, check up once in a while to see that she is having a good time.

Looking after your wife at a party is not above and beyond the call of duty.

Complete Revision of Labor Laws Deemed Necessary Now

By PETER EDSON

WASHINGTON - (NEA) - Labor Day 1953 found representatives of both employers and employes pretty well up in the air as to what will happen to their relations with the government during the coming year.

President Eisenhower's special message on labor law revision is supposed to be in final draft form sometime in late September. Sen. H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey, chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, reported as he emerged from a White House conference just before Congress adjourned.

Whether the President's message will be kept on ice for a possible special session of Congress later in the fall, or whether it will be held for next January, has apparently not been decided.

The early draft of the President's labor policy statement which leaked out a month ago had to be called back in a hurry for further revision. Listing some 15 proposed changes in the Taft-Hartley labor law, it still did not go far enough to suit labor union leaders. But it scared the U. S. Chamber of Commerce because it made too many concessions to the unions.

President Eisenhower is, of course, on something of a spot with regard to laborlaw revision. He promised it during his campaign for election. After inauguration he created a labor-management public commission to study the question. It broke up after one meeting in which the conferees could not even agree on what to do first. Durkin Works With Counsel

To fill this void, Secretary of Labor Martin P. Durkin has been working with two White House counsel. Bernard M. Shanley and Gerald D. Morgan, Mr. Morgan was one of the drafters of the original legislation that turned out to be the Taft-Hartley law. Whatever this committee of three comes up with, however, it can't possibly satisfy both labor and management.

The President's new message on amending the Taft-Hartley law therefore seems doomed to the same fate that has met every other proposal along this line - Democratic or Republican. The message will be referred to the labor committees of House and Senate to die.

Prolonged hearings will, of course, be held. At these hearings only the extremists are heard. Labor union extremists want the law killed outright. Management extremists want the law let alone or else made even tougher. Caught between these two forces, Congress usually comes up with a compromise which pleases nobody.

To get around this difficulty, Cyrus S. Ching, former head of the Conciliation Service and one the smartest labor relations men in the country, has been advocating an independent commission be allowed to try its hand at a complete overhaul of all labor laws.

As a suggestion, the commission might have three senators, three representatives and six outsiders appointed by the President. Members of both the labor unions and the National Association of Manufacturers would be kept off this commission. Its non-governmental members would represent the general public.

Employes and employers might scream their heads off that this is legislation without representation. But the fact that it was the spokesman for these two groups who upset President Eisenhower's conference earlier this year is cited as evidence that they have no place on a commission to study complete revision of the labor

Multiplicity of Labor Laws

The need for such review arises from the multiplicity of labor laws now on the books. In addition to many conflicting state laws, there are the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act, the Davis-Bacon Prevailing Wage Labor Act, the Walsh-Healy Public Contracts Act, the Railway Labor Act and others.

Several new labor practices like pensions, costof-living escalator clauses and automatic productivity increases have been introduced since Taft-Hartley became law. Questions on whether these cost-of-living increases can be made compatible with rigid economic controls in time of war is debatable.

Even the Railway Labor Act. which was considered model legislation at the time of its passage, has shown signs of coming apart at the seams during recent-rail-wage disputes.

It is recognized that in certain industries — the railroads, maritime transportation and atomic energy production - special legislation is needed. Interunion warfare and racketeering on the waterfronts are a severe handicap to the U.S. Merchant Marine. And the sanctioning of strikes in atomic energy production — if that industry can ever be defined - are a threat to national

But the fundemental problem which far-sighted labor relations experts think should be given more consideration is a complete review of all labor relations, instead of just another series of patchwork amendments such as now seem to be in the making.

Reds Try Sleight of Hand

The world over, Communists try to practice this slick trick: They agree to do something in exchange for performance on the other side. But they don't deliver all they promised. And then they try to bargain anew and get something merely for making good on their original

That little tactic may be in the back of their minds now as they deliberately withhold certain American and Allied prisoners from repatriation. They promised to give up all prisoners. But they may believe they will be able to bargain at the coming political conference on this point, getting us to give more than we have

The agenda of that conference is important, not only to a final Korean settlement, but perhaps to a wider Asian peace. Yet we should flatly refuse to take up a single item on the list until the Reds have delivered to us every prisoner they hold. We cannot be placed in the position of conceding something anew to them in order to win back men they pledged to return at armistice time. There can be no discussion of new terms until the old terms are honored.

Truman Speech Hailed, Hit By Both Sides

WASHINGTON (#)-Former President Truman's broad gauge attack on the Eisenhower administration, blanketing in its national defense policy, brought reaction of praise and criticism which generally followed party lines.

Speaking to a Labor Day crowd estimated at 155,000 in Detroit yesterday, with a nationwide television audience looking on, Truman assailed cuts made this year in the defense budget and said. "I don't see how anybody can take chances with our national defense than former President Truman.

And Sen, Dirksen (R-III) put a similar reaction this way: "I am sure the country prefers to rely upon the wisdom of the man who commanded the invasion of Europe than on the artilleryman from Independence.

Truman, in his first speech on domestic affairs since leaving the White House in January, criticized the new administration's actions on interest rates, public housing power development and labor-management law.

He termed the Taft-Hartley Act a bad law, and said he had failed to see it changed "as promised by the Republican candidate during the 1952 election campaign. Overall, he told an AFL-CIO rally, "there are signs of a return to the old philosophy that the object of government is to help big business
